Myerscough's research, however, indicates that the government's role in education should be limited to the provision of basic services, such as roads, health care, and basic education. The government should not be involved in the production of goods and services, as this would lead to inefficiencies and waste. The government should instead focus on providing basic services and ensuring that the private sector is able to provide the remaining services. This approach would allow the government to focus on its core functions, while leaving the production of goods and services to the private sector. This would lead to a more efficient and effective economy, as the private sector is better suited to deal with the complexities of the market.
