

CHAPTER 9: HEAT

9.1 Relationship between Temperature and Heat

1. Heat is a form of energy obtained from various sources such as the Sun and fossil fuels
2. Heat flows from hotter region to colder region
3. Temperature is the degree of hotness or coldness of an object
4. Temperature increases in a hot environment and decreases in a cold environment
5. Temperature is measured using a thermometer
6. The differences between heat and temperature

Heat	Temperature
A form of energy	The degree of hotness and coldness of an object
Measured in Joule (J)	Measured in degrees Celsius ( $^{\circ}\text{C}$ ) or Kelvin (K) [ $0^{\circ}\text{C} = 273.15\text{ K}$ ]
The amount of heat depends on the type of material, quantity of material and temperature	Temperature depends on the degree of movement of the particles in a matter

9.2 Heat Flow and Thermal Equilibrium

1. Heat flows from a hot object to a cold object
2. Heat flow happens in 3 different ways:

(a) Conduction
(b) Convection
(c) Radiation

3. Conduction

- The process of heat transfer from hotter regions to colder regions through a solid medium
- The particles that receive heat energy will vibrate and collide with one another more frequently and transfer the heat to the whole medium

1. Stick three thumbtacks on a copper rod using candle wax and set up the apparatus as shown in Figure 9.1.
2. Heat the end of the copper rod and observe the sequence in which the thumbtacks fall off.

Explanation:

- i. When one end of a metal rod is heated by a Bunsen flame, the particles of the metal rod near the flame get extra heat energy from the flame.
- ii. The particles vibrate more vigorously, knocking into neighbours particles and transferring energy to them
- iii. The neighbouring particles, in turn, knock their neighbours and pass energy to them.
