

To determine the amount of solar rooftop potential for the United States is to determine the number of rooftops across the nation that are suitable for solar panels. Rooftop potential depends on the size of the roof, the amount of shade it gets, the direction it faces, and the general location.

Consumer Guide to Residential Solar Rooftop Potential

According to the National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL), there are more than 8 billion square meters of rooftops on which solar panels could be installed in the United States, representing over 1 terawatt of potential solar capacity. Residential and other small rooftops represent about 65% of national rooftop potential, and 42% of residential rooftops are households with low-to-moderate income. NREL estimates that an average of 3.3 million homes per year will be built or will require roof replacement—representing a potential of roughly 30 gigawatts (GW) of solar capacity annually. If even a small fraction of these new roofs had solar installations, it could have a significant impact on U.S. solar power generation.

INDIVIDUAL ROOFTOP POTENTIAL

Solar rooftop potential for an individual rooftop is the amount of solar that could be installed on that rooftop, based on its size, shading, tilt, location, and construction.

The U.S. Department of Energy has funded the development of tools that estimate the amount of solar that could be installed on a given rooftop. The following tools can help consumers start the process of choosing solar by determining the solar potential of their homes or businesses:

ENERGYSAGE

EnergySage allows homeowners, businesses, and nonprofit organizations to estimate their energy savings from solar and connects them with prescreened installers who can provide estimates specific to the user's address. Consumers can comparison-shop and select the system that fits their needs best. Electricity bills are used to estimate the potential savings from solar energy, and has been found to offer customers substantial savings. energysage.com

When installers provide customers with an estimate for a residential solar energy system, they use satellite maps, irradiance data, equipment specifications, and other factors to inform their bids and help customers understand the costs and benefits of solar panels on their roof.
