Strip away borders, languages, and beliefs and it is easy to comprehend why we lean towards a system of globalization. A more harmonious world is fashioned where business, social, and legal cultures intertwine. With the concept of survival of the fittest in mind, you might not initially believe it, but the need to symmetrically co-exist and get along can be said to be a fundamental human nature. Globalization, therefore, facilitates the standardization of systems to streamline the ideas and implementation thereof, in various jurisdictions.

As a result, the legal world is witnessing the effects of worldwide integration on adjudication, contractual drafting, and everything that may follow. The International Federation of Consulting Engineers (Fédération Internationale Des Ingénieurs-Consells - FIDIC) applies the concept of integration by providing templates that are used as guides to drafting contracts internationally. The requirement of such synchronized documents succor in maintaining equitability and uniformity. So, would these harmonized and aligned legal systems result in the efficacious delivery of justice, promised by law?

In this issue of Court Uncourt, our astute international attorneys aim to clarify the application of and equitability of various legal matters ranging from maritime arbitration to Islamic financial leasing. We intend to provide our readers with a clear picture on these legal issues by providing a substantial analysis on each topic. Thank you and we wish you an insightful read in this issue of Court Uncourt.
