RESEARCHERS have found that the use of a computer-based system to monitor and control the environment of a hospital room can reduce the risk of infection. The system, called the 'Smart Room' system, was developed by researchers at the University of Michigan and the University of California, San Diego. It was designed to monitor and control the temperature, humidity, and air flow in a hospital room. The system was tested in a study of 100 patients in a hospital room. The results showed that the use of the Smart Room system reduced the risk of infection by 50% compared to a standard hospital room. The researchers concluded that the Smart Room system could be used to reduce the risk of infection in other hospital rooms.
