

the longest white stretch limo you've ever seen. Walk past 250 Sullivan, which used to be Canapa's Bakery. Across the street is Pepe Rosso to Go, which used to be Rocky's Vegetable Store. The butcher shop's another leftover, with sawdust on the floor and a butcher block from years ago. Pino took over for Mario, but the flavor's the same. There used to be another butcher on this street, as well as two bakeries, two grocery stores, a club, some storefronts, and some stores that were just for rent to keep baby carriages and bicycles.

Cross Prince Street and keep walking and you'll come to a sign that reads "Anonymous Hair Salon." Go in on a Saturday morning and you'll be back in the old neighborhood. All the seniors come to get their hair washed and set and teased into bouffants that will hold all week. You'll get all the gossip: who died, who's sick, who's been naughty and who's been nice, plus you'll get a good haircut. Ask for Pat. She'll order you coffee and a sandwich at lunch-time. But be nice . . . you gotta be nice in the neighborhood. Then shop all you want in the SoHo everybody knows.

Closed Mondays and Tuesdays.

If the urban shuffle is making you pine for pastoral environs or if you just want a place to reflect, the Earth Room—a sanctuary in a SoHo loft—is the answer. Created in 1977 by American artist Walter De Maria, it is filled with two hundred and fifty cubic yards of rich, dark topsoil weighing two hundred and eighty thousand pounds and standing twenty-two inches high. Originally one of three Earth Rooms—the other two created by De Maria in Germany—this is the only one still remaining, sponsored and maintained by the Dia Center for the Arts. Prepare to be transported by an incredibly unique experience.

☞ For someone who finds comfort in the gloriously faded past while being entirely immersed in the present, Raoul's is a godsend. I remember pulling up to the bar when I was a young writer and feeling as though I'd arrived home. Countless evenings have been spent enjoying long, winding discussions with friends, surrounded by straight talkers and abstract expressionists, gamblers, and rock stars. Fifteen years after my first steak au poivre at Raoul's, I still look forward to every visit—every greeting from Eddie, maître d' and dear friend; every walk through the hectic kitchen to the back room; every journey up the precarious circular staircase leading to the restrooms. I've enjoyed dinners for fifteen in the front room settled comfortably into the seemingly ancient long banquette, as well as simple dinners for two, hidden away at a table under the skylight. Raoul's seems to get better every year, even though it hasn't changed a bit.
