Generalized linear models for categorical data analysis

The following figures will show approximately how many men and how much time are required to cover the following area, using such an area as a model to cover the other areas.

and the other, a more or less complete absence of any trace of the original structure, the latter being replaced by a thin, irregular, and somewhat granular deposit of a light-colored, yellowish, or brownish-yellow material, which is often very soft and friable, and which, when dried, becomes brittle and easily broken into small fragments. This material is composed of a number of different substances, and is often found to contain a large amount of organic matter, such as dead leaves, twigs, and other plant remains, which have been partially decomposed by the action of the micro-organisms present.

On December 20, 1990, the Missouri Department of Natural Resources received a complaint from a citizen that the water flowing from the two discharge wells at the site was discolored. The citizen stated that the water was brownish in color and had a strong odor. The Department of Natural Resources investigated the discharge wells.

the following three sections should suffice to show the reader the main features of the theory.
