A focus is a point about which the conic section is constructed. It is a point about which rays from the curve converge.

A directrix is a line used to construct and define a conic section. The distance of a directrix from a point on the conic section has a constant ratio to the distance from that point to the focus.

Definition and Properties of a Circle

A circle is a shape of a circle that has the constant radius. The relationship between the radius and the diameter is always constant. The radius of the circle is the distance from the center of the circle to any point on the circle. The diameter of the circle is the distance between two points on the circle that are opposite each other and pass through the center.

Parts of a Circle

- Center is the point in the middle of a circle.
- Radius is the distance from the center to any point on the circle.
- Diameter is the distance between two points on the circle that are opposite each other and pass through the center.
- Chord is a line segment that connects two points on the circle.
- Secant is a line that intersects the circle at two points.
- Tangent is a line that touches the circle at only one point.
- Normal is a line that is perpendicular to the tangent line at the point of contact.
