Becoming a caregiver to a loved one may have been something you saw coming for years, or it may have been a sudden surprise.

Whatever your particular situation, as a family caregiver you're joining a group that numbers in the millions.

34.2
million

the number of Americans who provided unpaid care to an adult age 50 or over in the last 12 months (AARP)

$470
billion

the economic value of unpaid care in 2013, the latest year for which data is available (AARP)

While every caregiving situation will be unique, here are a few suggestions that can help make your time as a caregiver easier.

Write it down

Caregivers have a lot to keep track of - medications, doctor appointments, symptoms, etc. Keep a notebook dedicated to documenting your loved one's information so you're not overwhelmed by relying only on your memory.

Keeping written records will also allow someone else to step in and care for your loved one if you're unavailable for some reason.

Ask questions

Caregiving is a complex task, and you need information in order to do it well. If your loved one's doctors or professional caregivers aren't forthcoming with the information you need, ask questions. Be assertive.

At first, you may be uncomfortable pressing a doctor or nurse for more details, but remind yourself that you're simply seeking the knowledge you need to provide the best care possible.

Find a balance

No one can be an effective, compassionate caregiver if they neglect their own emotional needs.

You may feel that taking time to care for yourself is an impossibility, especially if you have your own family to take care of or work a full-time job. But it's vital that you give yourself the ability to step back and recharge, whether by having a friend or family member step in for the day or using the services of a paid home caregiver on occasion.
