

- extremely high energy, low density, indefinite volume, indefinite shape
- solids, liquids & gases are fluids, volume only is definite in solids & their compressibility changes over 2 orders of magnitude \rightarrow volume change is relatively large
- Phase transitions of matter
 - transition that occurs for a 1D system from a condensed
 - condensing gas phase \rightarrow liquid phase
 - ex. water droplets out of pot after water boils & steam cools down on the plate in the kitchen
 - freezing liquid phase \rightarrow solid phase
 - transition that occurs for a 3D system from a condensed
 - melting solid \rightarrow liquid
 - evaporating liquid \rightarrow gas
 - ex. water to water vapor on a hot bath
 - sublimation solid \rightarrow gas
 - ex. dry ice turning into carbon dioxide
 - deposition gas \rightarrow solid
 - ex. water vapor turning into ice in subfreezing temps
 - Phase: state of matter seen in the form of a 1D or 3D solid phase, 1D or 3D liquid phase or 3D or 2D or 1D gas phase (all three states change to a determined gas through the release of enough heat)
 - 3D common states
 - amorphous solids, state that flow between a solid & liquid
 - ex. glass
 - superfluid fluids, matter that has properties of a liquid & a gas that can pass through solid while still being a liquid
 - degenerate matter, matter that allows for sufficient pressure to restrict quantum cycles of being
 - ex. exists in some stars
 - Bose-Einstein condensate, theoretical matter that creates light waves
 - States of matter: physics & chemically based
 - physical states of matter \rightarrow the 3 possible ways character of each molecule of a substance behaves (s, l, g)
 - solids are defined by atoms packed closely together that vibrate in place, have definite shape & volume, are not compressible
 - liquids are defined by atoms loosely packed to one another, have no definite shape which allows for fluid movements of atoms
 - gases have atoms that are moving apart widely, no defined shape/volume, have the least moving molecules
 - physical changes: between states of matter preserve the substance's identity as the matter changes form, while chemical changes result in new products being made as the matter is often conserved
