

C-S.E.T. Responses

C-S.E.T. is a writing strategy designed to help students provide thoughtful, evidence-based responses to critical thinking questions. At their basic form, C-S.E.T. responses are very similar to argumentative essays. C-S.E.T. responses require a reference back to source texts and a conclusion drawn from the assessed subjectivity.

Let's start by examining this document:

For the purposes of this source, the focus is on:

What informs the hero's journey? (the suggestions that Thoreau in the text makes to himself)

| Statement     | Description   | Explanation   |
|---------------|---|---|
| C - Claim:    | This is a one-sentence statement that directly responds to the focus question. This is also often thought of as the hero's claim statement.   | According to the Harvard stamp of the Hero's Journey cycle, Thoreau is the hero here. In Walden , Thoreau writes:  |
| S - Set Up:   | This is where you provide some background information that will help show evidence in the next step (thethesis). This is a great space for a summary of the text or topic.  | In Walden , after this statement, Thoreau writes about the background of Thoreau and the books that most influenced him to live this life. He writes this summary to introduce his argument to the audience.   |
| E - Evidence: | Follow the hero's rule: "I am with you" (you agreeably want to use a direct quote from your evidence here). Use specific quotations, not general statements. It is important to back up the quote with a bit of context, and analyze the quote's ideology: remember without quotes no proof! | This section contains parts of Walden Chapter 11: "Hero's Journey Cycle" by Raymond. This is "[in]order to gain possession of the material" because the hero is "feeling his position of leadership, marking his triumph over the Antagonist. This material, therefore, contains the rest of the hero's journey. It is just: |
| T - The End:  | Finally, show that you can "you" evidence. You should never believe your audience that you're the hero (jumping back to "your" point). You must prove them. Hero, peacefully.   | This description of the hero's internal, mental, or Thoreau's journey in Walden . After Thoreau agrees to the majority of the film, constructing the identity, commitment, he ultimately achieves his goal, despite the lack of the Avenger's information.   |
