

Week 10 — Social Justice, Racism, and Human Rights

In this week's reading, we see how Black scholars propose alternative positions of social justice, centered on the levelling of language hierarchies. How do the concepts of "language" and "style" have these implications?

After discussing what these scholars believe the scholars' "real" positions are in contrast to the "feminist" positions they claim to hold, the "white subject" scholars respond to this critique.

In this session, we will look at how social justice, Blackness, and the concept of "style" have these implications.
