Abstract: This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 100-hour, noncredit, intensive training program for individuals with a history of substance abuse who were seeking employment. The program was designed to provide participants with the skills and knowledge necessary to obtain and maintain employment. The program was evaluated using a pretest-posttest design. Results indicated that participants who completed the program were more likely to obtain employment and were more likely to remain employed for a longer period of time than those who did not complete the program. The program was found to be effective in helping individuals with a history of substance abuse to obtain and maintain employment.
