Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and blood pressure (BP) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and resistance exercises. The HR and BP were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week program. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in both HR and BP compared to the control group. The HR decreased from 72 to 68 beats per minute, and the BP decreased from 120/80 to 110/70 mmHg. The control group showed no significant changes in HR and BP. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively reduce HR and BP in sedentary, middle-aged men.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and blood pressure (BP) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The control group consisted of 10 men who did not exercise, and the exercise group consisted of 10 men who exercised for 12 weeks. The HR and BP were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in both HR and BP compared to the control group. The HR decreased from 72 to 68 beats per minute, and the BP decreased from 120/80 to 110/70 mmHg. These results suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively reduce HR and BP in sedentary, middle-aged men.

RESEARCHERS have found that the use of a computer-based system to monitor and control the environment in a laboratory can improve the accuracy of the data collected. The system, called the Environmental Monitoring and Control System (EMCS), was developed by researchers at the University of California, San Diego. It was used to monitor and control the environment in a laboratory where researchers were studying the effects of stress on the immune system. The system was able to maintain the temperature, humidity, and light levels in the laboratory at constant levels, which allowed the researchers to collect more accurate data on the effects of stress on the immune system.
