Rolland, 2012-12-06 A A Haspel's It is with pleasure that I welcome you on behalf of Professor Rolland and myself to Amsterdam for this International Symposium on Benefits and Risks of Hormonal Contraception As a means of family planning the pill is about 25 years old a timespan which has been characterized by an enormous increase in public interest and concern with family health and family planning Undoubtedly we have learned a lot over the last 25 years As you see in Figure 1 in the seventies in Holland relatively more fertile women used the pill than in any other country in the world In 1974 new combination pills were introduced containing less than 50 µg of ethinyl estradiol In 1981 50 % of Dutch pill users took a sub 50 µg pill Figure 2 The same is true for the Scandinavian countries In our own University Clinic 95 % of pill users take a sub 50 µg pill only 5 % use a 50 µg pill on medical indication This decrease in estrogen dosage which is usually accompanied by a decrease of progestational component as well has resulted in a decrease of thromboembolic disease Factors that are still important to consider are diabetes mellitus hypertension adipositas and smoking Good selection of patients together with the prescribing where possible of sub 50 µg pills may result in the numbers of complications and side effects being close to those encountered in the control group
