Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with mild cognitive impairment (MCI). The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 15) participated in a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program. The control group (n = 15) did not participate in the exercise program. The primary outcome was the change in the Mini-Mental State Examination (MMSE) score. The secondary outcomes were the change in the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) score, the change in the Physical Functioning (PF) score, and the change in the Quality of Life (QoL) score. The MMSE score increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The BDI score decreased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The PF score increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The QoL score increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults with MCI.
