

Chloroplasts and the Process of Photosynthesis

Q. What is a typical structure of a photosynthetic cell? Give two examples.

Chloroplasts are found in plant cells, green algae and cyanobacteria. They are membrane-bound organelles that contain chlorophyll and other pigments that are used to capture light energy. They are also involved in photosynthesis. Other leafy green plants like mosses and ferns do not have chlorophyll in their cells, so they do not have chloroplasts.

Chloroplasts have a double membrane. Inside these double membranes is a fluid called stroma. Within the stroma are stacks of green discs called thylakoids. These thylakoids are arranged in stacks called grana. Within each thylakoid is a green pigment called chlorophyll. Chlorophyll is a pigment that is used to capture light energy. It is also used to produce energy during photosynthesis. Chlorophyll is found in green plants, algae and cyanobacteria. It is also found in some protists and fungi.

Q. What three main things occur in the process of photosynthesis?

Photosynthesis occurs in certain photosynthetic organisms. These organisms include green plants, algae and cyanobacteria. These organisms use the energy from the sun to produce energy. This energy is used to produce glucose. Glucose is a type of sugar that is used for energy. It is also used to produce energy during photosynthesis. Chlorophyll is found in green plants, algae and cyanobacteria. It is also found in some protists and fungi.
