AP Biology Exam

Section 1: Photosynthesis

Introduction

- Photosynthesis is a process that converts light energy into chemical energy (sugars) using carbon dioxide and water.
- Chloroplasts are organelles in plant cells where photosynthesis occurs. They contain chlorophyll, the green pigment that captures light energy.
- Light-dependent reactions occur in the thylakoid membranes of chloroplasts. These reactions use light energy to produce ATP and NADPH, which are used in the Calvin cycle.
- Calvin cycle is a series of reactions that use ATP and NADPH to convert carbon dioxide into glucose. It occurs in the stroma of the chloroplast.
- Photosynthesis equation: $6\text{CO}_2 + 6\text{H}_2\text{O} \rightarrow \text{C}_6\text{H}_{12}\text{O}_6 + 6\text{O}_2$
- Factors affecting photosynthesis: Light intensity, carbon dioxide concentration, and temperature all affect the rate of photosynthesis.
- Limiting factors are factors that restrict the rate of photosynthesis. For example, if light intensity is low, it will limit the rate of the light-dependent reactions.
- Photorespiration is a process that occurs when the enzyme RuBisCO reacts oxygen with ribulose biphosphate (RuBP) instead of carbon dioxide. This process is wasteful and reduces the efficiency of photosynthesis.
- C4 pathway is a variation of the Calvin cycle that minimizes photorespiration. It involves the transport of a four-carbon compound (C4) between mesophyll and bundle sheath cells.
- C3 pathway is the most common type of photosynthesis. It involves the transport of a three-carbon compound (C3) between mesophyll and bundle sheath cells.
- CAM pathway is a variation of the Calvin cycle that allows plants to take up carbon dioxide at night and store it for use during the day. This is common in desert plants.

Significance

Photosynthesis

- How does photosynthesis convert light energy into chemical energy?
 - Light energy is absorbed by chlorophyll in the thylakoid membranes of chloroplasts.
 - This energy is used to split water molecules into oxygen and protons.
 - The electrons from water are used to reduce NADP+ to NADPH.
 - The protons are used to create a proton gradient across the thylakoid membrane, which drives the synthesis of ATP.
- What are the products of photosynthesis?
 - Glucose (C6H12O6)
 - Oxygen (O2)
- How does the structure of the chloroplast relate to its function?
 - The thylakoid membranes are stacked into grana, which increases the surface area for light absorption.
 - The stroma is the fluid-filled space surrounding the grana, where the Calvin cycle takes place.
 - The chloroplast envelope is a double membrane that separates the chloroplast from the rest of the cell.
- What factors affect the rate of photosynthesis?
 - Light intensity: The rate of photosynthesis increases with light intensity up to a point, after which it plateaus.
 - Carbon dioxide concentration: The rate of photosynthesis increases with CO2 concentration up to a point, after which it plateaus.
 - Temperature: The rate of photosynthesis increases with temperature up to an optimal point, after which it decreases.
