Conflicts Property Rights Land Brazil:

Titles, Conflict, and Land Use Lee J. Alston, Gary D. Libecap, Bernardo Mueller, 2010-05-06 The Amazon the world's largest rain forest is the last frontier in Brazil. The settlement of large and small farmers, squatters, miners, and loggers in this frontier during the past thirty years has given rise to violent conflicts over land as well as environmental duress. Titles, Conflict, and Land Use examines the institutional development involved in the process of land use and ownership in the Amazon and shows how this phenomenon affects the behavior of the economic actors. It explores the way in which the absence of well defined property rights in the Amazon has led to both economic and social problems including lost investment opportunities, high costs in protecting claims and violence. The relationship between land reform and violence is given special attention. The book offers an important application of the New Institutional Economics by examining a rare instance where institutional change can be empirically observed. This allows the authors to study property rights as they emerge and evolve and to analyze the effects of Amazon development on the economy. In doing so they illustrate well the point that often the evolution of economic institutions will not lead to efficient outcomes. This book will be important not only to economists but also to Latin Americanists, political scientists, anthropologists, and scholars in disciplines concerned with the environment. Lee Alston is Professor of Economics, University of Illinois and Research Associate for the National Bureau of Economic Research. Gary Libecap is Professor of Economics and Law, University of Arizona and Research Associate for the National Bureau of Economic Research. Bernardo Mueller is Assistant Professor, Universidade de Brasilia.

Property Rights, Land Conflict and Tenancy in Brazil Lee J. Alston, Bernardo Mueller, 2010 Tenancy has been a means for labor to advance their socio-economic condition in agriculture yet in Brazil and Latin America tenancy rates are low compared to the U.S. and the OECD countries. We test for the importance of insecure property rights in Brazil on the reluctance of landowners to rent because of a fear of expropriation arising from land reform. Since 1964 the Land Statute in Brazil has targeted rental lands for redistribution. The expropriation of farms resulting from land conflicts is currently at the heart of land reform policies in Brazil. Land conflicts are a means for landless peasants to bring attention to land reform agencies for the need for redistribution. Land conflicts may also signal to landowners that their land is at risk for expropriation. Utilizing data across all counties in Brazil we found that land conflicts reduce the likelihood of tenancy. This result implies a reduction in agricultural efficiency, a reduction in the well-being of potential tenants, now landless peasants, and an expansion of the agricultural frontier through deforestation. Because of endogeneity between land tenancy and land conflict we instrument land conflict with Catholic priests.

De Facto and de Jure Property Rights Lee J. Alston, Edwynna Harris, Bernardo Mueller, 2009 We present a conceptual framework to better understand the interaction between settlement and the emergence of de facto property rights on frontiers prior to governments establishing and enforcing de jure property rights. In this framework potential rents associated with more exclusivity drives demand for commons arrangements but demand is not a sufficient explanation norms and politics matter At some point enhanced scarcity will drive demand for more exclusivity beyond which can be sustained with commons arrangements Claimants will therefore petition government for de jure property rights to their claims formal titles Land conflict will be minimal when governments supply property rights to first possessors But governments may not allocate de jure rights to these claimants because they face differing political constituencies Moreover governments may assign de jure rights but be unwilling to enforce the right This generates potential or actual conflict over land depending on the violence potentials of de facto and de jure claimants We examine land settlement and conflict on the frontiers of Australia the U S and Brazil We are interested in examining the emergence sustainability and collapse of commons arrangements in specific historical contexts Our analysis indicates the emergence of de facto property rights arrangements will be relatively peaceful where claimants have reasons to organize collectively Australia and the U S The settlement process will be more prone to conflict when fewer collective activities are required Consequently claimants resort to periodic violent self enforcement or third party enforcement Brazil In all three cases the movement from de facto to de jure property rights led to potential or actual conflict because of insufficient government enforcement

Property rights and property systems vary along a large number of dimensions and economics has proven very conducive to analyzing these patterns and even the nature of property itself. The contributions found here lend fresh perspectives to the current body of literature examining topics including initial acquisition, the commons, anticommons and semicommons, intellectual property, public rights, abandonment and destruction, standardization of property, property and firms, marital property, bankruptcy, as property, titling systems, land surveying, covenants, nuisance, the political economy of property and takings. The contributors employ a variety of methods and perspectives demonstrating the fruitfulness of economic modeling, empirical methods and institutional analysis for the study of both new and familiar problems in property. Largeholder Deforestation and Land Conflict in the Eastern Brazilian Amazon Stephen Peter Aldrich, 2009 Over the past thirty years research on land cover and land use change in Amazonia has indicated a number of human-environment interactions which have led to extensive deforestation in the world's largest and most diverse standing tropical forest. Various underlying socioeconomic causes of deforestation are well explicated in the existing primary literature and include economic development concerns of national security and market influence. However, to date very little attention has been paid to the potential for social interactions between land managers to drive deforestation in the region. This dissertation focuses on one particularly contentious type of interaction: land conflict in one of Brazil's most active and controversial deforestation fronts in the South of the state of Pará. Land conflict in this part of Brazil typically pits largeholder ranchers against the landless poor.

with conflicts frequently escalating to the occupation of private property and even violent intimidation and murder. A number of factors contribute to this violence but among the most important is constitutional law which allows for the expropriation of private property for agrarian reform purposes if land is not considered productive. In the Amazon the most common measure of productivity is the amount of cleared land leading to a significant incentive for deforestation. When this constitutional law is combined with a socially organized peasantry largeholders are likely to take extreme measures to protect their property including significant deforestation. This work draws from concepts in the land change science literature a rich concept of geographic place and contentious politics in order to describe how conflict could be an underlying driver of deforestation. Drawing from this integration of political and ecological considerations I develop a logistic regression model which shows that the social movement organizations which confront wealthy cattle ranchers do so with much greater likelihood on properties displaying various physical and legal characteristics. Drawing from the insights provided by this logistic regression model I then specify a spatial error regression model which indicates among other things that land conflict increases the amount of deforestation on largeholdings in the region. The data used to develop these models involves an extensive archive of newspaper accounts key informant interviews with a variety of actors on both sides of the ongoing struggle for land geographic information systems and remote sensing. Among the chief policy implications of this research is a potential need to rethink the current measure of the productivity of properties in the Amazon to include criteria such as labor conditions number of people employed ecologically responsible use and actual productivity. A redefinition of productivity in this way could both limit environmental wrongs and begin to repair the rift between largeholders and the landless laborers of the region. p III IV Conflicts of Property Rights of Land in Brazil Manoela Pedroza, 2015 This study aims to understand how diverse social groups interacting in the specific context of a tropical colony were able to construct maintain and transform an original landholding structure and agrarian dynamic the strategies used to withstand legal environmental political and mental pressures brought to bear A Comparative Study of Land Reform in Brazil Alan Charnley Bull, 2005 New World Empires Ilhan Niaz, 2024-11-15 This book is a sweeping reexamination of the evolution of the state covering the indigenous orders of pre Columbian America the Spanish Portuguese and British Empires in the Americas and their major successor states of Mexico Brazil and the United States Exploring the mechanisms of colonial order construction and the way in which that process prepared the ground for the emergence of national empires after independence Niaz contends that the destruction of indigenous demography and culture was so complete that the societies and states of the New World are colonial in their basic fabric thereby diverging from the Asian and African experience of European colonial rule.
