

Dell™ Latitude™ D630c System Board

Configuring Your Dell Latitude D630c Computer

Before you install or move out of your system, you should consider the following steps to help you properly and safely remove your components. Please take an inventory of your system's components. This document gives you instructions on how to remove and reassemble your system.

-  NOTE: The image on this page is a general representation of the system board. Your system board may look different depending on the components that were included in your system.
- 1. Remove the hard drive from the front of the chassis and then attach the front bezel to the front of the system board using the "Replacing the Bezel" instructions in Appendix C.

To remove a memory module, gently pull the module straight up. To install a memory module, gently push the module straight down until it is seated. The module is seated when the retaining clips are closed and the module is firmly seated in the slot.

For additional information, see Appendix C.
