Salt of the Earth ,1994-11 Panoptic Dreams Sean Patrick Hier, 2010 The number of Canadian cities using video surveillance systems to monitor city streets is growing In Panoptic Dreams Sean Hier explores how and why Canadian cities introduced street surveillance programs between 1981 and 2005 and brings to light the governance structures and privacy protection policy frameworks that made these programs possible This book uses empirical findings to reflect critically on video surveillance policy and design structures in Canada The original analyses will assist academics privacy advocates and others with community based interests to assess the strengths and weaknesses of establishing streetscape CCTV surveillance monitoring systems Panoptic Dreams Sean P.

Hier,2011-07-01 The past few decades have seen a proliferation of video surveillance systems in major centres in a number of Western countries Is this development in the public interest or does it signal a move toward more intrusive forms of policing This book provides much needed data for this debate as it explores how and why some Canadian cities introduced street surveillance programs between 1981 and 2005 and it brings to light the governance structures and privacy protection policy frameworks that made these programs possible Although surveillance initiatives sprang from a dream to establish a crime prevention system of discipline and social control that dream soon gave way to rationalizations based on the idea that streetscape video surveillance is a crime solving tool that makes people feel safer Panoptic Dreams not only identifies good practice in planning design and implementation it will foster informed debate about the ethics and utility of streetscape video surveillance in Western democracies
