Studies, 2004) that selected groups in other countries, rather than markets themselves, and other more general spillovers, may dominate the risk premium. The last point, more broadly, goes to the need to diversify. However, within the US, regional bond portfolios are much more diversified, regional prepayments are also lower. Therefore, individual state prepayment experience is less important. Bond prepayments are concentrated more in the more volatile, longer dated, local, and municipal markets. However, state tax paid bond managers do not have much of a choice in investment policy. Therefore, prepayments is largely out of their hands. Theory and related empirical studies prepayments and concentrations are not consistent with each other. In short, some local policies, either as regulations that encourage and/or distract by other policies and policies and take away
