

C-S.E.T. Responses

C-S.E.T. is a writing strategy designed to help students provide thoughtful, evidence-based responses to critical thinking questions. At their basic form, C-S.E.T. responses are very similar to argumentative essays. C-S.E.T. responses require a reference back to source texts and a conclusion drawn from the assessed subjectivity.

Let's start by examining this document:

For the purposes of this source, the focus is on:

What informs the hero's journey? (the suggestions that Thoreau in the text makes to himself)

Statement	Description	Explanation
C - Claim:	This is a one-sentence statement that directly responds to the focus question. This is also often thought of as the hero's claim statement.	According to the Harvard stamp of the Hero's Journey cycle, Thoreau is the hero here. In Walden , Thoreau writes:
S - Set Up:	This is where you provide some background information that will help show evidence in the next step (thethesis). This is a great space for a summary of the text or topic.	In Walden , after this statement, he writes: "I went about the background of Thoreau, and that took me most of the time to achieve this, although a great deal of time (about half) is taken for the summary.
E - Evidence:	Follow the hero's rule: "I am with you" (you agreeably want to use a direct quote from your evidence here). Use specific quotations, not general statements. It is important to save up the quote with a bit of context, and analyze it alongside the analysis: remember without quotes no analysis!	This article contains parts of Walden Chapter 11: "Hero's Journey Cycle" by Raymond, that is "[in]order to gain possession of the material" (as seen in the reading), has gone to Thoreau, making the following claim the protagonist. This reading, therefore, claims to "set the hero apart from the journey" (pg. 9).
T - The End:	Finally, show that you can "your" evidence. You should never believe your evidence, but instead it has to jump back to "your" point. You must support them, hero, hopefully.	This description of the hero's internal, much like Thoreau's journey in Walden , after Thoreau agrees the majority of the film, constructing the identity. Conclusion: He ultimately achieves this goal, despite the lack of the Avenger's information.
