new evidence on water quality. Current water monitoring programs, however, do not measure bacteria. Bacteria are often used as an indicator of water quality because they are more abundant than other microorganisms. Bacteria that are present in water are usually derived from living organisms.

Another type of immunotherapy that targets a tumor-associated antigen is called adoptive cell transfer. Tumor cells are removed from a patient and grown in the laboratory. These cells are then treated with a substance that makes them more attractive to the immune system. These treated tumor cells are then injected back into the patient. This treatment has shown promise in some cancers, such as lymphoma and melanoma.
