Study Guide

Part 1 | Financial Planning
Performance, etc.

Topic 2.3 Recognition, Measurement, and Valuation – Taxes and Revenue

Accounting for Income Taxes

- After studying this concept, you should be able to:
 - Differentiate between temporary differences and permanent differences and identify examples of each (1.A.2.c).
 - Distinguish between deferred tax liabilities and deferred tax assets (1.A.2.c).
 - Demonstrate an understanding of impairment for goodwill (2.B.2.c).

Deferred income tax refers to the difference between taxable income and accounting income. It arises from temporary differences between the two. These differences are reported on the income statement and balance sheet. The amount of deferred income tax is calculated based on the difference between taxable income and accounting income.

1. Not income under U.S. generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) or International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS) can differ from taxable income reported to government taxing authorities such as the United States Internal Revenue Service (IRS).
2. Differences are defined as either temporary or permanent depending on the reasons why the GAAP treatment differs from taxable income.
3. Permanent differences occur when GAAP treatment and taxable income differ due to the nature of the transaction, not the timing. These differences will never reverse because the underlying transaction is not taxable under GAAP treatment and principles.
4. Examples of non-deductible expenses:
 - a. Interest received from investments in state and municipal governments
 - b. Life insurance proceeds on the death of an insured executive
 - c. Portion of employee retirement plan that is not deductible due to the inclusion of non-deductible expenses
5. Examples of non-deductible expenses:
 - a. Investment expenses incurred to obtain investment income
 - b. Expenses paid for the insurance premium when the policy is the beneficiary
 - c. Compensation expense pertaining to some employee stock option plans
 - d. Fines or penalties due to violations of the law
