and the other two authors (S. J. H. and J. H. J.) were involved in all aspects of the scientific manuscript. In particular, S. J. H. was involved in the design of the study, the collection of data, the analysis of the data, and the interpretation of the results. S. J. H. and J. H. J. were also involved in the writing of the manuscript.

It is critical to ensure that the data are not only accurate, but also complete. This is because the data are used to calculate the mean and standard deviation, which are used to determine the confidence interval. If the data are incomplete, the confidence interval will be wider, indicating a greater degree of uncertainty. To ensure the data are complete, it is important to check for missing values and to ensure that all data points are included in the analysis.
