

LAB: LOOKING AT LENSES

Background

As stated in a previous section on light, light travels in straight lines until it meets a surface. When it meets a surface, it reflects off the surface. Light reflects off surfaces in different ways. Convex lenses bend incoming light rays to converge. Concave lenses bend light rays to diverge. These lenses are also called converging lenses and diverging lenses, respectively. A converging lens is one that bends light rays toward each other. A diverging lens is one that bends light rays away from each other. A converging lens is also called a converging lens, and a diverging lens is also called a diverging lens.

These are the main types of lenses. A converging lens is thicker in the center than at the edges. A diverging lens is thicker at the edges and thinner in the center. The thicker the lens, the more it bends light rays. A converging lens makes parallel light rays converge, and a diverging lens makes parallel light rays diverge. A converging lens is thicker in the center than at the edges. A converging lens makes parallel light rays converge.

Looking at Lenses

- Using a magnifying glass, look through it. Figure out what it does.
- Find an empty container of any sort with a curved bottom (it can even be something you used this week). Place the container in the light on your desk.
- Hold the 1 m ruler above the container. Hold a converging lens and move it towards the ruler. Look at the ruler through the lens. What do you observe about the image? Is it upright or inverted? Is it smaller or larger than the original object? Record these observations in the data table.
- Now, move closer to the ruler until the lens is held 10 cm away from the ruler. Look at the ruler through the lens again. Record observations in Step 3.
- Move the lens back and forth until you find the position where the image appears to "stop" from its previous position. Note that this time is from the ruler. This is the focal point of the lens. Record.
