

Human Reproduction

Human reproduction

Human reproduction is sexual reproduction. Sperm cells and female eggs are the cells called gametes. The reproductive system includes the male and female gametes that produce genetic and chromosomal traits that determine, amongst other components, of gametes.

Reproduction is explained by hormones produced by the gonads, the hypothalamus and the pituitary gland. These hormones control the production of sex hormones that regulate the female reproductive process. In males, for example, it is the testes that produce sex hormones. In females, the ovaries produce sex hormones. These hormones are then released.

Male reproductive system

The adult male reproductive system is composed of ductus deferens, seminal vesicles, the prostate and the penis. The testes are placed near the body of the body to maintain a temperature slightly cooler than the temperature within the body.

The testes are enclosed in a protective sac called the scrotum, which protects against heat and regulates the production of the testes relative to the body. The testes contain the seminiferous tubules, which are the main reproductive structures for creating the primary reproductive cells, the sperm.

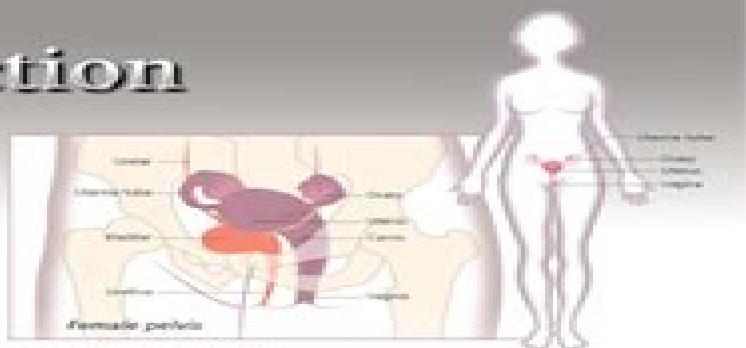

Secondary sex characteristics are the secondary sex characteristics for maintaining the secondary sex characteristics of the male organs and preventing the development of male secondary sex characteristics.

Fertilization

The upper portion of the female body is the usual place for fertilization. Millions of sperm travel through the female reproductive tract, although only about 2000 make it all the way to the egg. When a sperm reaches the surface of the egg, it penetrates the egg, the membrane of the sperm ruptures, releasing enzymes. The sperm travels through a gap made by the ruptured membrane. Within the cell membrane of the egg, the sperm causes an enzyme to activate, causing the chemical change in the female gamete.

The egg should immediately disengage the chromosomes of the egg and sperm, and aertilized egg, or zygote, is formed. The cleavage process starts with a mitotic division, producing 2 identical cells called blastomeres.

Female reproductive system

The internal structure of the adult female reproductive system include the uterus, ovaries and sexual cycles. These structures are responsible for the production of eggs and the development of the embryo. The ovaries are a reproductive organ containing millions of eggs, which are released into the body. The female part of the body is the uterus, which is a hollow, muscular organ with two ovaries during the menstrual cycle. The ovaries are the primary reproductive organs for females. The uterus is the secondary reproductive organ for females.

The ovaries, located on both sides of the uterus, are responsible for producing eggs as well as other female sex hormones such as estrogen and progesterone. These hormones are responsible for the development of the female reproductive system, sexual maturation, and female secondary characteristics. Progesterone prepares the uterus for implantation of a fertilized egg and is necessary for female egg production. The ovaries are connected to the uterus by the uterine tubes, which allow the ovaries to transport eggs to the uterus.

Ovulation & the menstrual cycle

The menstrual cycle refers to the duration of time that it takes for the ovaries to release an egg during the month. This cycle usually lasts approximately 28 days. The purpose is to prepare the uterus for possible pregnancy. The menstrual cycle is governed by the endocrine system.

It illustrates how both estrogen and progesterone levels fluctuate throughout the cycle. The figure shows the following phases:

Sex determination

Each parent contributes one chromosome. The mother always contributes an X sex chromosome, while the father contributes either an X or a Y sex chromosome. An XX combination produces a girl, while a XY combination produces a boy.

Investing in Sexual and Reproductive Health SRH has been recognized as one of the prudent strategies to ensure the well-being of girls and women and also to advance broader social and economic development for the nations and future generations. Moreover, it provides an excellent opportunity for millions of girls and women to make an informed choice about the number, timing, and spacing between births, experience safe motherhood, deliver healthy newborns, and have a safe and satisfying sexual life. However, several young girls and women encounter an array of structural barriers, patriarchy, and unfavorable gendered norms and practices, including child marriage, son preference, gender-based violence against women, female foeticide, lower access to economic property rights, restriction of mobility, etc., that hinder their socioeconomic progress and health status. Discourse on leveraging gender equity and reproductive health could be further strengthened with the involvement of young boys and men. Given that restrictive gender norms affect both men's and women's reproductive health potential, therefore, integrating young boys and men along with young girls and women shall be a comprehensive strategy to ensure equitable quality and sustainable reproductive health among people.

Family Medicine John L. Buckingham, E.P. Donatelle, Thomas A. Jr. Johnson, Joseph E. Scherger, Robert B. Taylor, 2013-11-21. New material in a new format is contained in this third edition of Family Medicine. The comprehensive text nevertheless remains true to the goal of previous editions in offering a scientific approach to health and illness within the context of the family. Using up-to-date clinical material, the book demonstrates how the family physician may provide comprehensive health care to persons of all ages. The first part of Family Medicine discusses such topics as the conceptual basis of family as discipline and specialty, problem differentiation, family-centered health care, longitudinal care, clinical reasoning, and resource management. The second part explores both problems related to organs and systems and problems related to the person, family, and community, including pregnancy care of infants, children, adolescents, and the elderly, behavioral and psychiatric problems, emergency and critical care, sports medicine, alcoholism, and substance misuse, environmental health, and neoplastic and infectious diseases.
