EDITED BY GLENN PEASE

The Beginning

1 In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth.

BARNES, " - Section 1 - The Creation

- The Absolute Creation

בָּרָא barā', the "head-part, beginning" of a thing, in point of time Gen. 1:1:10, or value Pro. 11:7. Its opposite is בָּרַא barā' Isa. 46:10. בָּרָא barā', "in the beginning," is always used in reference to time. Here only is it taken absolutely.

כָּreּ bara'; "create, give being to something new." It always has God for its subject. Its object may be anything: matter Gen. 1:11; animal life Gen. 1:12; spiritual life Gen. 1:12. Hence, creation is not confined to a single point of time. Whenever anything absolutely new - that is, not involved in anything previously extant - is called into existence, there is creation Num. 16:30. Any thing or event may also be said to be created by Him, who created the whole system of nature to which it belongs Mal. 2:10. The verb in its simple form occurs forty-eight times (of which eleven are in Genesis, fourteen in the whole Pentateuch, and twenty-one in Isaiah), and always in one sense.

אֱלֹהִים elohim, "God." The noun אֱלֹהִים elohim or אֱלֹהִי elohi is found in the Hebrew scriptures fifty-seven times in the singular (of which two are in Deuteronomy, and forty-one in the book of Job), and about three thousand times in the plural, of which seventeen are in Job. The Chaldee form אֱלֹהִים elohim occurs about seventy-four times in the singular, and ten in the plural. The Hebrew letter א (A) is proved to be radical, not only by bearing mappiq, but also by keeping its ground before a formative ending. The Arabic verb, with the same radicals, seems rather to borrow from it than to lend the meaning colsum, "worshipped," which it sometimes has. The root probably means to be "lasting, binding, firm, strong." Hence, the noun means the Everlasting, and in the plural, the Eternal Powers. It is correctly rendered God, the name of the Eternal and Supreme Being in our language, which perhaps originally meant lord or ruler. And, like this, it is a common or appellative noun. This is evinced by its direct use and indirect applications.

Its direct use is either proper or improper, according to the object to which it is applied. Every instance of its proper use manifestly determines its meaning to be the Eternal, the Almighty, who is Himself without beginning, and has within Himself the power of causing other things, personal and impersonal, to be, and on this event is the
