As a free summer math activity, "Thinking and Talking about Math" and help reinforce all the math that has already learned and begin to build the foundation for continuing to strengthen that will be taught next year. The goal is for your child to have fun thinking and applying skills learned to situations in the real world. While your child is working, another family member can find and talk about similar situations.

The math practice in this summer packet will focus on the areas in grade 3:

1. developing understanding of multiplication and division and strategies for multiplication and division within 100;
2. developing understanding of fractions, especially unit fractions (fractions with numerator 1);
3. developing understanding of the structure of rectangular arrays and of area;
4. classifying and analyzing two-dimensional shapes.

This packet contains all 11 calendar pages, and the June and July for 2016. These are probably enough for each day of the month, including weekends. Encourage ADD and students who are recommended to explore mathematics in different ways. This calendar year child to complete all the math activities. The hope your child will spend at least 30 minutes a day, 4 to 5 days a week practicing math. Create a goal with your child to keep numbers easy during the summer. For example, my child will work on completing at least 200 minutes of math practice over the course of the summer and keep track of their learning in a math journal. A math journal makes a great idea either to print or digital format. Use the example of a "speed" journal entry:

If the activities suggested do not appear to "fit your child" or you have your own activities, then use math practice you enjoy like the site, please feel free to add this year with activities that better suit your child's abilities for learning style. Encourage positive attitude about math using flashcards, money, etc.

Student mathematics learning plays an important role in preparing students for college and career readiness.
