

COMPASSION

DEFINITION

Compassion is characterized by feeling sympathy for someone's suffering and having a genuine desire to alleviate their pain. It goes beyond sympathy as it involves a genuine motivation to take action. It involves understanding of another person's emotions and a desire to support them in their time of need.

EXAMPLE

Helping the homeless demonstrates compassion by recognizing the struggles and hardships they face and taking action to alleviate their suffering. It involves providing support, such as offering food, clothing, or shelter, and showing empathy and understanding for their situation.
