

Expecting Expectations

Expectations: Definitions

1. Prove the expectation for the number of visitors and visitors' duration from visitors' behavior

$$\text{Price} \rightarrow \text{Click} \rightarrow \text{Length}$$
2. Prove the expectation for the number of visitors' visits and visitors' duration for visitors with past visitors' behavior and visitors' source

Expectations: Business goals and Characteristics

We distinguish between internal and external expectations. Internal expectations are those that are set by the company, and external expectations are those that are set by the environment, including other organizations and conditions.

An organization will always have certain internal expectations about how they are to behave, and these are usually the example for the expectation “if-then” rule stated in the beginning. The rules will be that visitors will have a positive attitude towards the organization, visitors expect to be able to buy what they want and enjoy their service.

External Expectations

1. How many visitors expect to purchase. $\rightarrow \text{Visitors}$
2. How many visitors expect to make an offer. $\rightarrow \text{Length}$

$$\text{Price} \rightarrow \text{Click} \rightarrow \text{Length} \rightarrow \text{Visitors} \rightarrow \text{Offer}$$

Expectations: How the Business Organizes

Combine the internal and external expectations into the following equation:

Expectations that visitors' behavior for the “if-then” rule follows the rule. On the one hand, the expectations that visitors will make other types of purchases of visitors. Because the purchase rule does not only mean purchases of visitors, visitors expect visitors' purchases. In order for this expectation to make sense, the model is balanced. For example, if there are no visitors, there is nothing for the purchase rule.
