The End of Ownership Aaron Perzanowski, Jason Schultz, 2018-03-16 An argument for retaining the notion of personal property in the products we buy in the digital marketplace. If you buy a book at the bookstore you own it. You can take it home, scribble in the margins, put it on the shelf, lend it to a friend, sell it at a garage sale. But is the same thing true for the ebooks or other digital goods you buy? Retailers and copyright holders argue that you don't own those purchases; you merely license them. That means your ebook vendor can delete the book from your device without warning or explanation, as Amazon deleted Orwell's 1984 from the Kindles of surprised readers several years ago. These readers thought they owned their copies of 1984. Until it turned out they didn't. In The End of Ownership, Aaron Perzanowski and Jason Schultz explore how notions of ownership have shifted in the digital marketplace and make an argument for the benefits of personal property. Of course, ebooks, cloud storage, streaming, and other digital goods offer users convenience and flexibility. But Perzanowski and Schultz warn consumers should be aware of the tradeoffs involving user constraints, permanence, and privacy. The rights of private property are clear, but few people manage to read their end user agreements. Perzanowski and Schultz argue that introducing aspects of private property and ownership into the digital marketplace would offer both legal and economic benefits. But most important, it would affirm our sense of self-direction and autonomy. If we own our purchases, we are free to make whatever lawful use of them we please. Technology need not constrain our freedom; it can also empower us.

This work addresses the environmental recognition of autonomous off road vehicles Algorithms like deep learning offer impressive performance regarding the classification and segmentation of a scene However context changes scene variabilities or disturbances pose significant challenges to these approaches and cause perception failures A challenge is achieving the universal applicability of perception algorithms Usually an algorithm fails in particular situations due to unconsidered circumstances in the design phase and complexity prevents fully considering all details Accordingly this thesis aims to increase the perception s robustness through context and data incorporation Furthermore it derives concepts for transferring methods to other robots and scenes A hint that such a task is achievable provides human cognition which is remarkably skillful and adjusts to arbitrary situations Biologically motivated perception and cognitive research indicate how an achievable perception design might function leading to guidelines for artificial perception conception The paradigm of behavior based systems suits these criteria due to modularity reactivity and robustness It allows realizing robust and transferable perception and control systems Consequently the thesis proposes a novel and reconfigurable behavior based top down and bottom up perception approach Quality assessment for data filtering and deviation control is a central aspect resulting in improved perception and data fusion results Attentional processing allows for selecting data based on attractiveness task environmental context and history Further context assessment of classification results enables reasoning according to the robot s memories and knowledge Validation uses five demonstrator vehicles operating in diverse environments and fulfilling distinct tasks Here a robust performance was achievable and perception adjusted well to the tested scenes and hardware layouts Writing & Designing Manuals Gretchen H.
