

Design and the Elastic Mind

MoMA The Museum of Modern Art

Over the past twenty-five years, people have experienced dramatic changes in their experience of time, space, matter, and identity. Individuals cope daily with a multitude of changes in work and global working across several time zones, traveling with virtual ease between virtual images and material images, and being inundated with information. Adaptability is an inherent distribution of intelligence, but today's virtual landscape is often left for something stronger: elasticity, the product of adaptability plus innovation. Design and the Elastic Mind explores the reciprocal relationship between science and design in the contemporary world by bringing together design objects and concepts that marry the most advanced scientific concepts with creative consideration of human intentions, habits, and aspirations. The exhibition highlights designers' ability to grasp innovative changes in technology, science, and history—changes that demand or reflect major adjustments in human behavior—and translate them into objects that people can actually understand and use. This Web site presents over three hundred of these works, including 114 projects that are not featured in the gallery exhibition.

Thinking People and Objects Design for Debate Visualization Thought to Action Aesthetics

Many designers, scientists, and artists have turned to design to give meaning to their speculative thinking, or what John Derry Brown has called "thinking." They are taking to a new culture in which representation is guided by engagement with the world and seen, modified, collaboratively with colleagues and other specialists. Whether in the form of objects, structures, or growth and algorithms, thinking gives shape to the ongoing dialogue between design and science.

Design has expanded into new fields, including the interactions between people and objects. Reproductive design features objects that respond to our needs rather than limiting our aspirations. The tagging of information in our environment makes the world into a flat information platform. New practices incorporate instinctive human habits, expanding our relationships with the objects they wish to use.

Design for Debate is a new type of practice that derives ways to structure the social, cultural, and ethical implications of emerging technologies by presenting not only artifacts, but also the questions themselves that go with them. These projects themselves place the human being at the center of the universe and seek to take into account scientific and technological progress while respecting and preserving our resources as individuals.

We live in an age when information is more prolific and widely available than ever before, and to ensure it is to understand it. The projects in this category demonstrate the ways in which designers and scientists blend the extremely small and the extremely large in order to bring them to a human scale, facilitating our ability to comprehend great amounts of data.

Designers have been working to process not just objects, but also new methods of manufacture and behavioral rules that establish the future of design forms and experiences. 3-D printing creates digital images to be directly printed into objects. Processing is a new design tool that, despite its complexity, is valuable in high-level design projects. New algorithms define how objects will evolve in response to their circumstances, which in a way, grow from how they are.
