

Chapter 6 Study Guide

1) Define memory and describe the 4 types of memory.

Memory is the capacity to store and retrieve information. Memory allows you to have conscious access to the past.

- Implicit Memory: becomes available without conscious effort, (ex: what should & should not be in a room).
- Explicit Memory: makes a conscious effort to recover information, (ex: the names of objects in a room).
- Declarative Memory: memory of facts and events, (ex: answers on your midterm).
- Procedural Memory: memory for how to do things, (ex: how to drive a car).

2) Explain the memory process.

- Encoding: processing of information that leads to representation in memory. Requires that you form mental representations to preserve the most important features of past experiences.
- Storage: the retention over time of encoded information. Can be short-term & long-term.
- Retrieval: the recovery of stored information at a later time.

3) Describe sensory memory.

The initial processes involved in the momentary preservation of fleeting impressions of sensory stimuli. Your sensory memories are durable enough to give you a sense of continuity, but not strong enough to interfere with new sensory impressions.

4) Describe short-term and working memory.

- Short-term memory: Associated with briefly holding on to recent experiences and with the retrieval of information from Long-Term Memory. Has a limited capacity $\sim 7 \pm 2$. Rehearsal (repetition of information) and chunking (grouping of information) can help keep the information in the STM.
- Working memory: is the memory resource used to accomplish tasks such as reasoning and language comprehension. It serves as a bridge for information coming and going to and from Long-Term memory.

5) Identify and describe the 3 components of working memory.

- Phonological Loop: holds and manipulates speech-based information.
- Visuospatial Sketchpad: manipulates visual and spatial information.
- Central Executive: directs attention, initiates decisions, and handles the essential task of learning, comprehending, reasoning, and language.

6) Summarize long-term memory, including a discussion of encoding in long-term memory.

Often retained over a lifetime and accessible over our entire lives. Constitutes an individual's total knowledge of the world and the self. Has no limit.

- The serial position effect: the first and last items in a series will be remembered
