

Chapter 41: Animal Nutrition

LO 41.1: Describe the dietary needs for chemical energy, organic building blocks, and the four classes of essential nutrients.

1. Use three sentences to explain the three nutritional needs an adequate diet must satisfy.
Animals need food to satisfy three nutritional needs. They need chemical energy for cellular processes. They need organic building blocks for macromolecules. They need essential nutrients to serve as substrate of enzymes, coenzymes, and as cofactors in biosynthetic reactions..

2. What are essential amino acids? What must vegetarians do in order to obtain them?

Essential amino acids are the amino acids that must be obtained from food in a prefabricated form. Many proteins in animal products such as eggs and meat have each of these amino acids in proper proportion. Vegetarians are able to obtain these amino acids by eating a varied diet of plant proteins.

3. What is the difference between malnutrition and undernutrition?

Malnutrition is a failure to obtain adequate nutrition when a diet lacks one or more essential nutrients or consistently supplies less chemical energy than the body requires.

Undernutrition is when a diet fails to provide adequate sources of chemical energy, resulting in the body using stored-up carbohydrates and fat and then beginning to break down its own proteins for fuel. Both can cause permanent damage or death.

LO 41.2: Distinguish the main feeding mechanisms of animals, and define four stages of food processing.

7. What happens in each of these stages of food processing?

ingestion: The act of eating or feeding.

digestion: Food is broken down into molecules small enough for the body to absorb.

absorption: Animal cells take up (absorb) small molecules such as amino acids and simple sugars.

elimination: Undigested material passes out of the digestive system.
