SETTING THE STAGE The Industrial Revolution affected every part of Great Britain, but proved to be a mixed blessing. Eventually, industry led to a better quality of life for most people. But the change to machines initially caused human suffering. Rapid industrialization brought pleasant jobs, but it also caused unhealthy working conditions, air and water pollution, and the rise of child labor. It also led to rising class tensions, especially between the working class and the middle class.

Industrialization Changes Life

The pace of industrialization accelerated rapidly in Britain. By the 1800s, people could earn higher wages in factories than on farms. With this money, some people could afford to heat their homes with coal from Wales and dine on Scottish beef. They wore better clothing, too, woven on power looms in England's industrial cities. Cities swelled with waves of job seekers.

Industrial Cities Rise For centuries, most Europeans had lived in rural areas. After 1800, the balance shifted toward cities. This shift was caused by the growth of the factory system, where the manufacturing of goods was concentrated in a central location. Between 1840 and 1870, the number of European cities housing more than 100,000 inhabitants rose from 23 to 47. Most of Europe's urban areas at least doubled in population, some even quadrupled. This period was one of urbanization—city building and the movement of people to cities.

• As cities grew, people crowded into tenements and slum houses such as these in London.
