Chemical Carcinogenesis Models And Mechanisms:

Chemical Carcinogenesis Francisco Feo, Paolo Pani, 2013-11-11 About two centuries after the communication by Sir Percival Pott that the chimney sweeper disease was a cancer and its suggestion that active compounds of soot were the causative agents and about one century after the description of urinary bladder cancer in dye workers an enormous number of substances have been synthesized and have probably come into contact with man Research in cancer prevention is of primary importance and may receive continuous support from new discoveries on cancer etiology and pathogenesis If one accepts the multistage model of chemical carcinogenesis one has also to accept that many events occur between the contact of carcinogenic compounds and their specific targets and the development of a clinically recognizable neoplasm Thus animal studies become essential to elucidate the different steps by which chemical carcinogens induce neoplasia The analysis of these steps and the comparative evaluation of experimental models is essential to an understanding of pathogenesis

This volume in the Comprehensive Toxicology series demonstrates how the use of extremely powerful molecular and cell biology techniques has stimulated the growth of toxicology as a scientific discipline. The field of toxicology has evolved from its earlier days of in vivo and descriptive studies to focusing on mechanisms. Frequently mechanisms require an examination at the cellular and molecular level. Molecular toxicology has opened the door to comprehending the basic mechanisms of how toxicants show their effects. The volume is a comprehensive integrated profile of the molecular effects of toxicants and the molecular mechanisms involved in producing cellular and tissue injury. Directory of Published Proceedings, 1991
