Shirk,2010-12-07 Thirty years ago the Chinese Communist Party CCP made a fateful decision to allow newspapers magazines television and radio stations to compete in the marketplace instead of being financed exclusively by the government The political and social implications of that decision are still unfolding as the Chinese government media and public adapt to the new information environment Edited by Susan Shirk one of America s leading experts on contemporary China this collection of essays brings together a who s who of experts Chinese and American writing about all aspects of the changing media landscape in China In detailed case studies the authors describe how the media is reshaping itself from a propaganda mouthpiece into an agent of watchdog journalism how politicians are reacting to increased scrutiny from the media and how television newspapers magazines and Web based news sites navigate the cross currents between the open marketplace and the CCP censors China has over 360 million Internet users more than any other country and an astounding 162 million bloggers The growth of Internet access has dramatically increased the information available the variety and timeliness of the news and its national and international reach But China is still far from having a free press As of 2008 the international NGO Freedom House ranked China 181 worst out of 195 countries in terms of press restrictions and Chinese journalists have been aptly described as dancing in shackles The recent controversy over China s censorship of Google highlights the CCP s deep ambivalence toward information freedom Covering everything from the rise of business media and online public opinion polling to environmental journalism and the effect of media on foreign policy Changing Media Changing China reveals how the most populous nation on the planet is reacting to demands for real news The Chinese Journalist Hugo Burgh, 2004-03 An intriguing introduction to Chinese journalists and their roles within society offering a background history of journalists and the media in Communist China and examining the origins and development of Chinese journalism Reporting for China Pál Nyíri, 2017-04-11 While Western media are shrinking their foreign correspondent networks Chinese media for the first time in history are rapidly expanding worldwide The Chinese government is financing most of this growth hoping to strengthen its influence and improve its public image But do these reporters willingly serve formulated agendas or do they follow their own interests And are they changing Chinese citizens' views of the world Based on interviews and informal conversations with over seventy current and former correspondents Reporting for China documents a diverse group of professionals who hold political views from nationalist to liberal but are constrained in their ability to report on the world by China's media control audience tastes and the declining market for traditional media Chinese Investigative Journalists' Dreams Elin Sæther, Marina Svensson, Zhi'an Zhang, 2013-12-11 This edited volume brings together scholars positioned in and outside of China including former Chinese journalists in a comprehensive and in depth study of Chinese investigative journalists' work practices and strategies It is the first book that systematically addresses the roles and values of Chinese investigative journalists in different types of media in the process addressing topics such as journalism education different generations and sub groups among investigative journalists and gendered roles within investigative journalism The book discusses journalists' relations with the state and issues of political control and censorship but seeks to unpack the state by looking at different administrative levels institutions and geographical locations Furthermore the authors acknowledge and analyze how investigative journalism today is shaped constrained and negotiated through contacts with other actors than the state including companies civil society and the audience The book sheds light on the possibilities and restrictions for more critical journalism in an authoritarian regime China's Media in the Emerging World Order Hugo de Burgh, 2017 China is challenging the mighty behemoths Google and Facebook and creating alternative New Media 750 million people are active on its Social Mediascape and there are a billion mobile phones deploying the innovative apps with which the Chinese conduct their lives Though late starters already four of the world's leading New Media companies are Chinese China's old media television newspapers radio challenge the established powers which were long thought unassailable such as CNN and BBC Produced in many languages on every continent they are re defining the agenda and telling the story in China's way with not just news and documentary series but also entertainment The world's biggest manufacturer of TV drama is now making its stories for export China's Media tells you why and how It investigates the Chinese media their strengths and weaknesses and how they are different from the West This detailed and comprehensive guide aims to showcase their immense variety and diversity and demonstrates how they came to be a powerful new force in the media world

The Chinese Journalist Hugo de Burgh, 2005

Reporting the News from China Robin Porter, 1992 This volume provides an analysis of the way the world's images of China have been formed since 1979 The product of a series of seminars at the Royal Institute of International Affairs it is written by journalists and China specialists from Great Britain Canada and the United States They present original insights into the difficulties faced by Western correspondents and about the techniques of news presentation and control used by the Chinese government and the Communist Party

Don't Force Us to Lie Allison Liu Jernow, 1994

Pressing Back Jonathan Hassid, 2010 Despite operating in one of the most tightly controlled media environments in the world Chinese journalists sometimes take extraordinary risks in exposing wrongdoing by power holders Based on interviews with Chinese news workers and others over 14 months of fieldwork and a computer assisted content analysis of nearly 19 000 Chinese newspaper articles my research examines the causes and consequences of this journalistic risk taking In doing so I point to a new category of oppositional behavior situated between the poles of quiescence and outright resistance This behavior which I term pushback takes place when actors privileged by professional or traditional standing oppose the state or its policies in ways that they perceive to be within the boundaries of the permissible These actors oppositional acts however are made with the explicit or implicit goal of pushing long term state policy in ways that the powerful might not currently find acceptable Although neither necessary nor sufficient to precipitate outright resistance pushback can under the right circumstances be causal and predictive of later resistive acts Even if pushback never progresses to explicit resistance it can have important long term political effects of its own including shifting power out of the hands of the party state and toward journalists Pushback I argue is spurred not by the macro scale political and economic changes in the Chinese media but by a type of professional orientation I term advocacy journalism Advocate journalists are those who view their role as advancing the development of the Chinese nation rather than either the Chinese Communist Party or Western style press freedoms It is ultimately these advocate journalists who tend to be younger and better educated than average who push back against the Party state's confining strictures Though circumstances vary they also tend to move from pushback toward overt resistance when the Party state effects a change that disrupts their everyday lives when there is a clear target or targets for blame and when there is a language of moral economy to rally around It is ultimately these journalists who are pushing the boundaries of state power and potentially reshaping the Chinese political landscape

How the Market is Changing China's News Xin Xin, 2012 This book provides a critical account of the transformations both structural and in terms of journalism practice undergone by Xinhua the top Party organ of the Communist regime in China since the start of the reform age in the late 1970s It sets out to answer a number of key questions 1 How far has the most influential news organization in China been marketized 2 How far has the marketization process changed the way in which Xinhua practices journalism 3 What has the impact of marketization been on Xinhua's relationship with central local and global actors 4 What does the case of Xinhua tell us about the transformation of Chinese media more generally The book draws on a wealth of empirical data derived from a combination of documentary research at Xinhua and Reuters together with more than 100 semi structured interviews with news executives journalists officials and academics in Beijing Shanghai Guangzhou Macau Hong Kong and London This book also offers

- 1 A critical review of theories of globalization as they relate to media and communication studies as well as Chinese studies
- 2 A discussion of the historical roots of Party journalism in China
- 3 An authoritative guide to China's contemporary media and political environment

The book will be an invaluable reference for students and academics in communication and media studies Chinese studies Asian studies international studies and development studies
