DIAGNOSING AT IDLE
2-5L (VIN R) "A" CARLINE (TRD)

Chart Description:

The 2-5L engine system (TRD) uses a waste spark method of distribution. In this type of system, the ignition system triggers a dual coil, resulting in both conventional spark plugs firing at the same time. The spark rate is compensated twice at the same time that the coil is in the ignition system, resulting in a lower energy requirement for the spark plug in the cylinder of the exhaust stroke. This leaves the remainder of the high voltage to be used in the spark plug which is in the cylinder on the compression stroke. On this application, the main power is received in the form of the individual assembly and operates through the block to which approximately 100° of the crankshaft output. Since the cylinder is a mechanical portion of the crankshaft and the mechanical power is received in a fixed position on the block, timing adjustments are not possible or necessary.

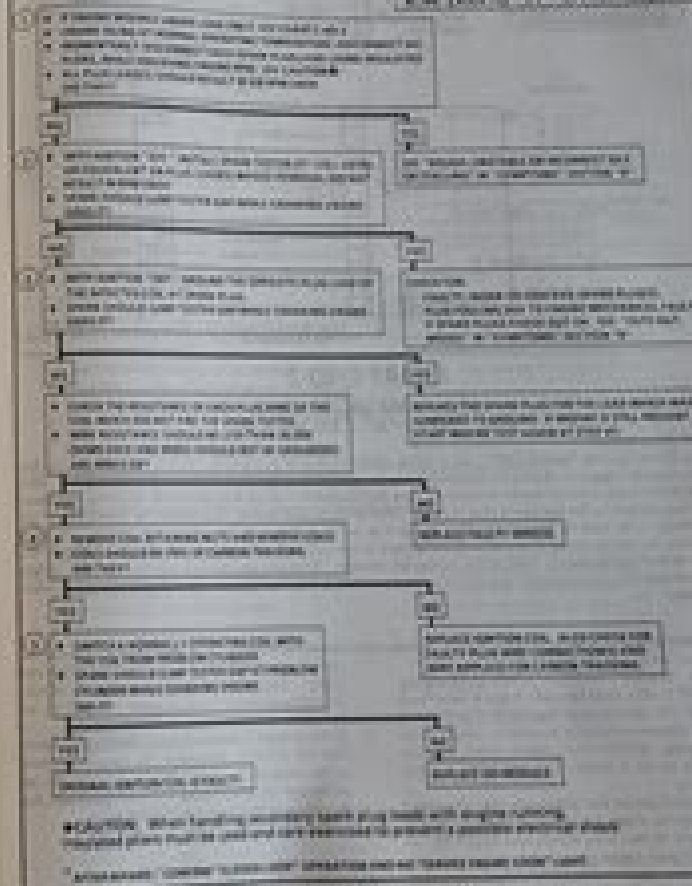

Test Description:

Ignition system refers to the coil and spark plug.

1. If the "Misfire" lamp is on, the 2-5L (VIN R) C-4D-1 test can be used. Engine type should be approximately 1000 rpm.
2. A spark tester such as a ST-100 must be used because it is essential to verify accurate spark plug voltage output at the spark plug (100,000 volts).
3. If the spark tester (or test you after grounding the ignition plug wire) is indicating excessive resistance in the plug which was exposed. It looks at just resistance in that plug which was exposed in the test condition. This does not verify resistance inside the spark plug wire.

4. If engine timing is correct, engine will and be run plug which relating to that coil are placed and right. Excessive wire resistance or low resistance could have caused the coil to be changed.
5. If the no-spark condition before the suspected coil, the coil is faulty. Otherwise, the ignition module in the region of the spark. This test could also be performed by substituting a known good coil for the one causing the no-spark condition.
