A recent report by AstraZeneca suggested, comparing the survival rates for the community and general United States (US) populations, that smoking rates of former and current smokers of 3.0% for women (mostly the white and Latina) by contrast are about 10 times greater in the Hispanic population. Another researcher has reported the low rates (approximately 10%) of the Hispanic population and (100%) of the non-Hispanic white population. The smoking distribution and low smoking in the Hispanic United States is consistent across all income levels.
