

SPEX CertiPrep's Three Levels of Quality Enable You to Calibrate with Confidence®

Reference Materials of the Highest Quality - How Can We Prove It?

To ensure the validity of results from today's high-performance instrumentation, SPEX CertiPrep has developed an extensive line of the highest quality chemical reference materials. How can we prove it?

The International Standard Organization (ISO) has established a set of guidelines designed to define common business practices, increase responsibility, and ensure clarity and full disclosure in the industry. As depicted in the diagram above, there are three ISO quality management systems that are most relevant for reference material manufacturers – ISO 9001, ISO 17025 and ISO Guide 34. Each ISO standard has its own set of internationally recognized criteria against which companies are formally measured. Moving toward the top of the cone, each level is more difficult to achieve and fewer companies are able to meet the required criteria. SPEX CertiPrep is proud to have all three. By taking the extra step of choosing to demonstrate our competence and comply with these standards, we are continuously proving that our tests and calibration results are technically competent and our products truly are of the highest quality.
