The spectrum of available treatment options for benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH) is matched by the spectrum of disease severity and with up to 90% of men in their 80s suffering from BPH to some extent it is imperative that patients are offered the full range of options to manage the disease. Pharmacologic therapies available for the treatment of lower urinary tract symptoms secondary to BPH include alpha adrenoceptor antagonists such as terazosin, doxazosin, alfuzosin and tamsulosin and the 5 alpha reductase inhibitors finasteride and dutasteride. Other strategies such as plant derived medication or watchful waiting are applied to varying extents. Derived from the benchmark title on BPH, Textbook of Benign Prostatic Hyperplasia, this well written and highly illustrated guide covers all these therapies and presents physicians with all they need to know to successfully manage the disease. The Treatment of Prostatic Hypertrophy and Neoplasia. J.E. Castro, 2013-03-09. In 1963 Professor Huggins wrote more than one half of the male population over the age of 50 suffer from benign tumors known as prostatic hypertrophy. Often an enlarged prostate is the only difficulty to cloud an otherwise tranquil old age. This statement emphasizes two important features of benign prostatic hypertrophy (BPH): the frequency with which it occurs and its association with increasing age. The true incidence is difficult to determine as most data relate to selected groups of patients; moreover the diagnostic criteria of prostatic hypertrophy are not clearly defined. Normality merges imperceptibly into abnormality for even in men who are clinically normal rates of urinary flow decrease with increasing age. Despite these inaccuracies incidence figures show the magnitude of the problem. Flocks (1963) reported that 65% of American men over 60 years suffer from it and in a selected group of Danish men 43% had symptoms of the disease. Similar figures are reported for the United Kingdom. At present most patients with BPH who need treatment undergo surgical prostatectomy which may be considered the usual treatment. The frequency of the disease alone creates certain problems for annually more than 30,000 men are admitted to hospital in the United States with this as a primary diagnosis and with an ageing population the figures can be expected to increase A Man's Guide to Coping with Disability Resources for Rehabilitation (Organization),1999 A Man's Guide to Coping with Disability provides the essential information that men need in order to pursue their rights and obtain the services that enable them to be independent 7 Coping with Prostate Cancer Robert H.
