Motivation

Define Motivation and Its Parts

Motivation is an internal state which tends to direct people to attain objectives and encourages them to persist regardless of external goals. The word encompasses both the knowledge of an action, especially characterized as self-motivated, and the part. The motivation is often an internal state that encourages.

Explain the Impact of Internal Motivation

- 1. Motivation is a psychological state that is a result of a person's internal state.
- 2. Motivation is a state that is a result of a person's internal state.

Describe the Relationship between Motivation and Performance

There is a relationship between motivation and performance.

There is a relationship between motivation and performance.

Motivation is a psychological state that is a result of a person's internal state. It is a state that is a result of a person's internal state. It is a state that is a result of a person's internal state. It is a state that is a result of a person's internal state.

Explain the Classical Theories of Motivation

Motivation is a psychological state that is a result of a person's internal state.

There are four main theories of motivation: Maslow's hierarchy of needs, Herzberg's two-factor theory, expectancy theory, and goal setting theory.

- 1. Maslow's hierarchy of needs theory: This theory suggests that people have five levels of needs: physiological, safety, love/belonging, esteem, and self-actualization. These needs are arranged in a hierarchy, with the most basic needs at the bottom and the most complex needs at the top.
- 2. Herzberg's two-factor theory: This theory suggests that there are two types of factors that motivate people: hygiene factors and motivators. Hygiene factors are factors that are necessary for a person to be motivated, but they do not actually motivate a person. Motivators are factors that actually motivate a person.
- 3. Expectancy theory: This theory suggests that people are motivated by the expectation that their efforts will lead to a desired outcome.
- 4. Goal setting theory: This theory suggests that people are motivated by the setting of goals.
