

- Product Design and Development Before the product is born, there are many initial steps to take to ensure a successful product launch.

	Identify the needs of the market and the specific requirements of the customer.
Market Research	Identify the needs of the market and the specific requirements of the customer.
Product Concept	Identify the needs of the market and the specific requirements of the customer.
Product Design	Identify the needs of the market and the specific requirements of the customer.
Prototyping	Identify the needs of the market and the specific requirements of the customer.
Testing and Evaluation	Identify the needs of the market and the specific requirements of the customer.
Manufacturing	Identify the needs of the market and the specific requirements of the customer.
Marketing and Distribution	Identify the needs of the market and the specific requirements of the customer.

- Marketing and Distribution Once the product is born, it needs to be marketed and distributed to the customer.

Marketing and distribution are the final steps in the product development process. The marketing department is responsible for creating and executing the marketing plan, which includes advertising, promotions, and sales. The distribution department is responsible for getting the product to the customer. This may involve finding a distributor or retailer, or it may involve selling the product directly to the customer. The marketing and distribution departments work together to ensure that the product is successfully marketed and distributed to the customer.
