First, providing a narrative report, representative of the first and third-party reports, should lead to higher reliability. Second, providing a summary report regarding the test outcomes to reduce the test-taker's responsibility of generating the report will increase the reliability of testing and a reduction in test anxiety. The current study was designed to test the following hypotheses:

It is not clear how many of these firms will be able to do so, but it is likely that they will be able to do so.
