

1. What is Homeostasis?

Homeostasis refers to any process that living things use to actively maintain fairly stable conditions necessary for survival.

2. Describe the function of the 4 main structures of the cell membrane. Study the cell membrane coloring WSI. You will need to be able to identify the structures in a diagram.

Phospholipids- Make up the majority of the membrane forming a barrier due to its polarity.

Carbohydrates- Chains that attach to the outer part of the membrane helping in cell to cell signaling/communication.

Transport Proteins- located within the cell membrane used for transporting larger molecules across the membrane.

Cholesterol - located within the cell membrane between the fatty acid tails preventing them from sticking together. Allowing the cell to maintain its flexibility and fluidity.

3. What macromolecule is each of the 4 main structures an example of?

Phospholipids- A type of lipid.

Carbohydrates- a type of carbohydrate.

Transport Proteins- a type of protein.

Cholesterol -a type of lipid.

4. What are the 2 other names for the cell membrane?

Plasma membrane and phospholipid bilayer

5. What are the general characteristics of phospholipids? (polar vs Non Polar) (Hydrophobic vs Hydrophilic)

The polar heads are hydrophilic so they face the watery environment on the outside and inside of the cell.
The tails are hydrophobic and non polar. They don't mix with water.

This is why they are arranged tail to tail

6. Explain how the structure of the cell membrane allows it to be semi-permeable (selectively permeable) barrier.

The membranes components all have different properties (see above) which allow for it to be semi-permeable which means it allows some molecules through but keeps others out.

We used the analogy of a spaghetti strainer.

7. How does a cell membrane help maintain homeostasis?

By controlling what enters and exits the cell.

8. Define and give an example

a. Solute= a substance that can be dissolved ex Salt
