Language, Cohesion and Form Margaret Masterman, 2005-01-16 Margaret Masterman was a pioneer in the field of computational linguistics Working in the earliest days of language processing by computer she believed that meaning not grammar was the key to understanding languages and that machines could determine the meaning of sentences She was able even on simple machines to undertake sophisticated experiments in machine translation and carried out important work on the use of semantic codings and thesauri to determine the meaning structure of texts This volume brings together Masterman's groundbreaking papers for the first time Through his insightful commentaries Yorick Wilks argues that Masterman came close to developing a computational theory of language meaning based on the ideas of Wittgenstein and shows the importance of her work in the philosophy of science and the nature of iconic languages Of key interest in computational linguistics and artificial intelligence it will remind scholars of Masterman's significant contribution to the field

Machine Translation John Lehrberger, 1988 The use of the computer in translating natural languages ranges from that of a translator's aid for word processing and dictionary lookup to that of a full fledged translator on its own However the obstacles to translating by means of the computer are primarily linguistic To overcome them it is necessary to resolve the ambiguities that pervade a natural language when words and sentences are viewed in isolation The problem then is to formalize in the computer these aspects of natural language understanding The authors show how from a linguistic point of view one may form some idea of what goes on inside a system's black box given only the input original text and the raw output translated text before post editing Many examples of English French translation are used to illustrate the principles involved
