

Constitutional Designs

South Africa – From Apartheid to the Formulation of the Constitution

The Constitution can be defined as the set of rules and laws which the citizens and the Government have to follow. It is the supreme law of the country. It lays down the rights and the freedoms of the citizens and the power and the responsibilities of the Government.

The Policy of Apartheid

- Apartheid refers to the racial discrimination on the basis of the colour of skin. Many Europeans had settled in South Africa during the seventeenth and the eighteenth centuries.
- These white Europeans began to rule the country. They followed the policy of apartheid in which the natives called „blacks“ and the coloured (people of mixed
- races and Indians) were treated as inferiors.
- The blacks and the coloured people could not live in the areas inhabited by the whites. They could work in these areas only if they had the permit to work in the white areas.
- Swimming pools, libraries, cinema halls, beaches and colleges were all separate for the whites and the blacks. The coloured and the blacks could not even enter into churches
- which were reserved for the whites. Non-whites also did not have the right to vote.
- The blacks and the Indians began to raise their voice against the oppressive apartheid policy. The African National Congress led the struggle against the apartheid policy. Many whites who opposed the policy of apartheid also joined this organisation and protested against the policies of the white Government. Nelson Mandela led the struggle of the non-whites against the South African Government.
- The South African Government detained, tortured and killed many protestors and continued to rule. Nelson Mandela was detained and sent to prison for a period of 28 years by the Government.
- By 1994, the Government realised that it will not be possible to rule South Africa, and thus, the white Government changed its policies. All discriminatory laws were repealed,
