3. The induced electromotive force is proportional to the rate of change of magnetic flux.

4. The effect that occurs in a conductor when varying magnetic field is applied in the direction that is normal to the area of the conductor.

5. The factor that increases the induced electromotive force with the rate of change.

6. The phenomenon of current through a circuit other than the source of a magnetic field.

7. An inductor that has higher mutual inductance than other inductors.

8. A conductor that has a higher rate of change of magnetic flux than other conductors.
